Dietary changes and gastric inhibitory polypeptide secretion during oral alimentation in chronic hemodialyzed patients. The objective of this study was to evaluate the effects of oral alimentation, with two distinct meals, on gastric inhibitory polypeptide (GIP) secretion in chronic hemodialyzed patients (CHP) and to establish the influence of dialysis adequacy on the release of GIP in oral alimentation. The study consisted of two consecutive 6-hr kinetic studies in 15 CHP under oral alimentation (OME) in a crossover design. The first sequence was preceded by a period of fasting and OME and the second by a period of moderate oral alimentation (AOE) (600-1,200 kcal). Both sequences were performed at an interval of 4 weeks. Blood samples were taken at 15-min intervals for the determination of plasma GIP concentrations and for the serum glucose and urea determinations. The dialysis adequacy was evaluated by urea concentrations at the end of the OME and AOE periods. Oral alimentation with a moderate meal increased significantly ($P = 0.02$) the GIP values after a period of fasting in comparison with the fasting values. The GIP values increased significantly ($P = 0.01$) during the period of moderate alimentation. The values were strongly correlated (P less than 0.001) to the values of urea and glucose. The adequate dialysis period was shorter in the AOE than in the OME study (P less than 0.001). The results of this study point out the importance of oral alimentation in CHP. Even though dialysis is adequate, oral alimentation is ineffective in increasing plasma GIP concentrations and the
